

Summary of relevant skills and experiences

Stefano Osella is a PhD researcher in comparative public law and gender at the European University Institute, Italy.

Moreover, he is a Hauser Post-Doctoral Global Fellow at New York University, where he is affiliated with center for Diversity, Inclusion, and Belonging. His areas of research are queer legal theory, comparative constitutional law, and fundamental rights law.

His PhD dissertation, which is expected to be defended in May 2019, is a deep investigation of the law on gender identity through the lenses of queer theory. He has published in the field of gender studies and the law. He is also socially engaged, giving his help in two organisations devoted to fostering LGBTI rights. As for his education, Stefano has graduated with a bachelor and master degree from the University of Turin. Moreover, he has graduated with a Magister Juris from the University of Oxford, UK.